

On Thursday and Friday, October 23 and 24, Dr. Lindsay Jeffers and nine WMU graduate students attended the Michigan World Language Association (MIWLA) fall conference in Lansing, Michigan. It was a valuable experience that students said they would recommend for future students (based on survey responses after the conference).

One student said, “I learned so many things that I could use in my class. I loved getting resources and interacting with different language educators.” Another stated, “I loved getting ideas from experienced teachers. I have a whole new list of strategies and activities to try in my classroom.” Another said, “After the conference, I could see so many activities that I can do in my classes, as well as an enriched perspective on what language learning is.”

WMU also hosted a table at the university reception on Thursday afternoon, with an opportunity for current WMU graduate students and WMU alumni attending the conference to take a photo of Bronco language teachers throughout the state of Michigan.
