

Archaeological Field School

You are invited to participate in WMU's Archaeological Field School. This is a unique opportunity to fulfill the required experiential learning component of the Anthropology Major, and an exciting way to explore a career in archaeology.

During this course, you will conduct field work in Niles, Michigan where WMU has teamed up with the City to uncover the past of Fort St. Joseph, an eighteenth-century mission, garrison, and trading post complex. Students will be able to get their hands dirty and help to uncover the fort's history while learning tangible skills for a career in archaeology.
