Reports of University Representatives

Bush reported that the WMU Essential Studies Course Review and Approval Committee is finalizing all current proposals in two meetings during November, in order for the WMU Essential Studies Executive Advisory Committee to be able to vote on them at its December meeting. Anything not approved by the end of December will be on hold until the 2025 catalog.

Bush reported working with the University Assessment Steering Committee regarding the fourth-year review of the WMU Essential Studies program. Bush explained that the cyclic review should be a quick check-up for each course. This year, the cyclic review will cover the WMU Essential Studies course categories of Global Perspectives, Artistic Theory and Practice, Personal Wellness, and Quantitative Literacy. The cyclic review proposals will be due 15 January 2024. The WMU Essential Studies Course Review and Approval Committee will review the cyclic review proposals during the 2024 spring semester.

Ott reported on the proposed development of an Ad Hoc WMU Essential Studies Transfer of Credit Committee to assist advisors of students with transfer credits that could meet WMU Essential Studies requirements. He requested that a faculty member chair the Ad Hoc Committee. Once the Ad Hoc committee has been approved, it will need to be populated by suitable faculty and advisors. A list of potential members has been compiled.

[MOTION] It was moved by DeChano-Cook, seconded by Lemon, to approve the creation of an Ad Hoc WMU Essential Studies Transfer of Credit Committee. The motion carried unanimously.

DeChano-Cook reported that WMU undergraduate advisors are still approving non-approved WMU Essential Studies courses for WMU Essential Studies credits. This was put into place before there was a full portfolio of WMU Essential Studies courses, but now that there is a full portfolio of WMU Essential Studies-approved courses, advisors should avoid making such exception decisions. DeChano-Cook recommended that an announcement be disseminated in January with these details. Bush will take the lead on meeting with advisors, and the WMU Essential Studies Executive Advisory Committee will revisit the topic at its December meeting.
